

Don Sullenberger, III "Robin"

Robin Sullenberger retired in 2013 as CEO of the Shenandoah Valley Partnership, a regional economic development and marketing organization. A resident of Highland County, he served five terms on the county Board of Supervisors, retiring from that role in 2011. In 2013, he was featured in Virginia Business Magazine as one of the 50 Most Influential Virginians. Also in 2013, the Virginia Economic Developers Association (VEDA) designated him a Cardinal, its most distinguished status.

Sullenberger is a graduate of Virginia Tech in Marketing and began his career as a teacher and coach in Bath County, Virginia. He later spent 10 years with Dominion Resources in various management positions, leaving in 1990 as Director of Real Estate. Currently, he is a business advisor and consultant with SRI International in the Shenandoah Valley and remains active on state and regional boards, including the State Board for Community Colleges, Council for Rural Virginia, Shenandoah Valley Partnership, Shenandoah Valley Workforce Board and Shenandoah Valley Technology Council.

Previous experience includes gubernatorial appointments to the Virginia Higher Education Commission and the Virginia Broadband Roundtable. Sullenberger lives on a cattle ranch in Highland and is an avid fly fisherman and bird hunter.
